LESSON FOR OCTOBER 20.

MISSION TO THE GENTILES.

LESSON TEXT-Mark 7:24-30 and Matthew 8:5-13.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."—John 6:37.

Chronologically the incident of the centurions servent precedes that of the Syrophenician woman, though we will look at them in the order suggested. The one incident occurs near the border of Tyre and Sidon, probably about May or June, A. D. 29, and the other in Capernaum during the summer of A. D. 28. Both are incldents in the life of Jesus that have to do with his ministry as the Hebrew Messiah to those who were outside of the pale of Judaism.

At the beginning of Mark's record (v. 24) we have a wonderful suggestion as to the strain of Jesus, ministry and the accompanying lesson that true righteousness cannot be hid, it speaks for itself.

There are four uses of the word "answered" in Matthew's record of this incident (Matt. 15:21-28) that are suggestive. Let us first, however, get the setting. This woman was a Greek -a Gentile; by race she was a Syrophenician, that is, a Canaanite. Thus she was a descendant of that race whom God, by the hand of Joshua, had driven out to make room for the Hebrew nation, and as such is under the ban of God. See Eph. 2:12. Yet this woman reaches Jesus, her trouble being that her daughter is possessed by an unclean spirit. At her approach she takes a lowly place at Jesus' feet and requests that he heal the child. She calls him the "Son of David," and "He answered her not a word." Matt. 15:23. She had no claim upon him as the Messiah. This was the wrong footing, for she was not a child of the kingdom. It was her need that drove her to him. How she had heard of him is suggested in Mark 3:8 and 7:24, cf. Rom. 10:17. There are some question that silence will not answer. A wrong conclusion will be reached, as in this case the disciples came to a wrong conclusion and desired to "send her away." Contrast Jesus' patience with the disciples' impa-tience, "she crieth after us" and emphasize the danger of external judgment. There are many great moral issues today that are demanding another answer than that of silence.

The Answer of Law.

Jesus then made a second answer, the answer of law, Matthew 15:24, in which he accepts her estimate of him as the Jewish Messiah. His work was primarily to the Jews (John 1:11, But her need was great, and identifying herself with the need of the child she "worshipped" Jesus. He is more than the Messiah, he is a Saviour. Not yet, however, is Jesus ready to grant her request. His third answer (v. 25), the answer of mercy. is literally that first the children must be fed, and she replied, "Yea. Lord; even the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs." For this saying, viz., that she did not protest against the words he had spoken, but accepted the proper estimate of him as being the Jewish Messiah and herself as outside of that covenant, he made a fourth answer, the answer to faith. He answered: "O, woman, great is thy faith," v. 28, and grants her carte blanc (v. 28), "be it unto thee even as thou wilt." As outcasts, we must cast ourselves "at his feet."

Let us now look at the account of the centurion's servant. Once more Jesus is appealed to by one who is over exclusion policy. outside the Hebrew covenant and on behalf of a servant. In the other incident there was the interruption of a sceming refusal and here the interruption of an instantaneous granting of the request. Again we need to read the parallel accounts given by the other evangelists. Verse ten of this section is the key to this whole story. What are some of the marks of a "great faith?" First, it is tested. The servant was "dear unto the centurion." Luke 7:2. Second, it is progressive "when he heard of Jesus," Luke 7:3. Third, it will be recognized by others, Luke 7:4.

The Great Faith.

The protest in v. 9, and the remarkable commendation of Jesus thereon, is a solemn warning to all who are in covenant relations with God and his tions engaged in interstate commerce. Son whom he has sent. Jesus had there a glimpse of that great coming day unto him, v. 11 (cf. Rev. 7:9). The

This impresses us with the truth that personal work cannot be done by any rule of thumb: indeed, the Master seems seldom to have used the same method twice. Is there then no common factor in these two incidents? The yielding of faith to recall their servants if they wish always gains that which is sought-

People Realize That In Him They Have Candidate Fully in Sympathy With Their Everyday Needs and Requirements-Public Career Evidence of His Belief In Social and Industrial Justice.

When Roosevelt was nominated for vice president the bosses thought they had him buried. When he left the presidency they said: "Now we are through with him." When they defeated his candidate for governor of New York they announced that his power had vanished. When they stole the nomination from him at Chicago in June they said they had him down and out.

But they were fooled every time. Today he has the country on fire and the Democratic leaders know they have the fight of their lives on their hands.

Because the average, every-day citizen has confidence in him; believes in his moral earnestness, in his sincerity, in his insight into the real problems of the modern life, in his comradeship, in his fighting energy.

"We have had a president," Professor Moss of the University of Wisconsin exclaimed at the end of Roosevelt's term, "who thinks in terms of welfare, instead of wealth."

"I second the nomination of Theo-dore Roosevelt," said Jane Addams at the Chicago convention, "because he is one of the few men in our publie life who have been responsive to modern movement. Because of that, because the program will require a leader of invincible courage, of open mind, of democratic sympathies, one endowed with power to interpret the common man and to identify himself with the common lot, I heartily second the nomination." These qualities became increasingly apparent throughout the presidential term. The idea that a president of the United States should intervene to end a great coal strike was shocking to the dominant business leaders of the day. "He is pulling down the pillars of the temple," they shricked. The idea of effective railroad regulation was hooted at ten years ago. It was obtained from a reluctant congress only through the pressure of public opinion which the president was able to arouse. The men who had been fighting for pure food laws had not been able to get their bills reported by the committees until Roosevelt brought the power of publicity to bear. So throughout his term he kent steadily in view his fundamental principle that human rights must always be superior to property rights. His great record of legislative and executive achievement however subordinate to what he did in arousvisiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. ing the conscience of the people through his preaching of the doctrine of the square deal. Today he is naturally and inevitably the leader in the movement for social and industrial justice organized as the Progressive party.

The people have tried him. They understand his quality. They know that always he represents their cause, because he is one of them and their cause is his cause. So everywhere the people are for him.

WALL STREET'S OPPOSITION

After explaining that President Foosevelt is not antagonistic to capital lawfully applied, or to legitimate enterprise of any kind, the Wall Street News said during the campaign of 1904: "What, then, is the reason why these financial interests are scheming to defeat him? The answer is plain. They can not control him. All Efforts to control him through his ambition have failed. Any attempt to control him by grosser forms of bribery would, of course, be useless. Efforts to move him by sophistical arguments framed by clever corporation lawyers, into departure from the paths of duty and law, have not succeeded. He is a friend of capital. He is a friend of labor. But he is no slave of either."

A telegram from Portland, Me., re ceived in New York runs as follows *Progressive party gaining rapidly Entire county committee have resign ed and joined us. Estimates of our vote have increased 25 per cent durvoters."

Can you trust yourself as one of the rulers of this great country. If you can you are a Progressive and will vote that ticket next month.

When you vote the Progressive ticket you vote to put yourself in power. That is the issue in a nutshell, regardless of all the arguments made to the contrary.
